Opis / Description

Pecten Maximus

45 cm

Scallops are a common marine bivalve mollusk of the Pectinidae family. They inhabit all of the world's oceans, with the greatest concentration of species in tropical waters. There are nearly 500 known species of scallops divided into four families. They can vary greatly in size and colour. Surprisingly, scallops have many primitive eyes located along the edges of their mantles, with some species having around 100 of them. Prized for their sweet tasting flesh, scallops are a popular seafood and their farming and harvesting is becoming an increasingly profitable industry.
