The Mahi Mahi, dorado or dolphin fish is a popular pelagic gamefish of the coryphaenidae family. It is found in all tropical and sub-tropical waters of the world and is especially abundant to the IndoPacific, the Carribbean and the Gulf of Mexico. It is characterized by its beautiful coloration and recognizable large head. It feeds mainly on small fish, squids and small invertebrates and crustaceans. Mahi mahi are prized fish by anglers due to their brute strength (the name is derived from the Hawaiian for “very strong”) and a very popular fish amongst chefs.
